

TOMORROW IS ANOTHER DAY

It's 1938 and P.I. Toby Peters is watching Atlanta burn in the biggest scene in the biggest movie ever made. When an extra is found lying dead in a ditch, Toby could swear he sees Clark Gable--Rhett Butler himself--watching from the shadows. Now, years later, Gable is receiving anonymous death threats in poetry. And frankly, my dear, why should Toby give a damn? HC: Mysterious Press.

Reader's Opinions

A Toby Peters Mystery. The conceit here, similar to Max Allan Collins' historical mysteries, is historical people (specifically movie people, particularly Clark Gable) woven into the mystery. The difference, however, is that Collins builds his story around plausible resolutions of unsolved historical mysteries that tangentially involve...
