Peek Inside the Book

I think the most joyous thing in life is to loaf around and watch another bloke do a job of work. Look how popular are the men who dig up London with electric drills. Duke's son, cook's son, son of a hundred kings,...

The fisherman-painter has the best of the bargain as far as the weather goes, for the weather that is too bright for the trout deluges his hills and his sea with floods of radiant colour; the rain that interrupts picture-making puts water into the rivers and the lochs and sends him hopefully forth with rod and creel; while on cold dull days, when there is neither purple on the hills nor fly on the...

Reader's Opinions

I have to confess I got an awful shock when Inspector Parker made his brief appearance in this book its no longer Gabriel Woolf! I knew it was coming, but gah, I hate the transition every time. And it doesnt really help that this might be my least favourite of the mysteries: in the original book, it relies on suppressing information...
